The Hill Side. The city of Victoria, Hong Kong, is magnificently situated, the houses rising tier upon tier, from the water's edge to a height of over 500 feet on the face of the hill. Seen from the water at night when lights twinkle from the houses and among the trees, the city, spreading along the shore for over four miles, affords a sight not soon forgotten. Since 1888, a cable tramway gives access to the Peak, which is 1,800 feet above the sea, and rises steeply behind the centre of the city.
